Public Health
Thursday, February 5, 4-7pm
Career Center, Second Floor, Room 200

Have you considered a career in Health Care, but not necessarily in the traditional clinical areas (physician, dentist, pharmacist, etc.)? Perhaps you’re a “north campus” major drawn to organizations and opportunities in the Health Sciences? Or maybe you just have a strong interest in health-related issues, such as worldwide epidemics, dietetics, or the efficient delivery of healthcare services? Then the field of Public Health could be for you.

This dynamic program will focus on the nature of Public Health and the wide variety of career paths in the field. Valuable information and insights will be imparted first hand by an outstanding line-up of Public Health professionals and graduate school representatives - in moderated panel discussions, followed by a more intimate “meet and greet” with our guests. So don’t miss this exciting event on the impactful, growing, and versatile field of Public Health!

Representatives from the following schools include (subject to change):
- UCLA Fielding School of Public Health
- UCI School of Public Health
- Western University School of Public Health
- School of Community & Global Health, Claremont Graduate University
