Yalda Tehranian-Uhls, Adjunct Professor, Author at UCLA
PhD, Psychology, UCLA

Yalda Tehranian-Uhls spent over 15 years as a content developer and a senior film executive at studios such as MGM and Sony, and then earned a PhD in psychology from UCLA where she researched the impact of media on children. This unique background informs her perspective.

Laura DeFrancesco, Senior Editor at Nature Publishing Group
PhD, Cell Biology, UCSD

Laura DeFrancesco has been feature editor for Nature Biotechnology for a dozen years. Before that she wrote for various publications, both on staff and as a freelancer. She received a PhD from UCSD and did a post-doc at Cal Tech in molecular biology, and after doing science at various places she made a career change to science communication.

Janice Ahn, Medical Writing Manager at AMGEN
PhD, Molecular and Cellular Biology, Harvard University

Janice Ahn, PhD, is a Medical Writing Manager at Amgen with 8+ years of medical writing and scientific editing experience. She received both her PhD and AM from Harvard University in Molecular and Cellular Biology and her BS from UCLA. Dr. Ahn was recruited as an editor to review manuscripts for Nature Publishing Group and Elsevier and then transitioned into industry as a regulatory writer, authoring FDA clinical protocols and study reports for emerging new therapies. In her current position at Amgen, she works with leading physician experts to develop publications in hematology/oncology for rare and difficult-to-treat blood cancers.

Amber Dance, Science Writer
PhD, Biology, UCSD, 2007

Amber Dance is an award-winning freelance science writer based in Southern California. She contributes to publications including PNAS Front Matter, The Scientist, and Nature. After earning a doctorate in biology, Amber Dance re-trained in journalism as a way to engage her broad interest in science and share her enthusiasm with readers. She mainly writes about life sciences, with particular expertise in microbiology, cell biology, neuroscience and lab techniques.

Olga Lazin, Director Research and Development at PROFMEX
PhD, History, UCLA, 2015

Olga Lazin earned her PhD in History at UCLA in 2001. The title of her dissertation is “Decentralized Globalization And Governance: Civic Attitude and Civil Society in Rockefeller’s Latin America And Soros’ Eastern Europe.” Her dissertation has been published and can be downloaded here; http://www.decentralizedglobalization.com.
Amber Dance, Science Writer
PhD, Biology, UCSD, 2007

Always at the intersection of technology, music, and new revenue creation, Peter loves working with fantastic products to build revenue or partnership teams. Currently CRO of Mammoth Media, a new Science-Inc company in Santa Monica, creating entertainment alternatives to TV for teen and millennial audiences using social video and apps. Previously, Peter ran both the US Ad Sales and Global Partnerships teams at Shazam. Before that, he was at Pandora and going back to his native Boston had roles in web content, marketing, and sales.

Gregor Reti, Director Sustainability and Branding at Orco Development, Ltd.
BS, Marketing, Central European University, 2008

Branding executive for PolyGram (NL), Daewoo (KOR), Universal Studios (US) before joining Orco Development (FR) as their Branding and Sustainability Director, helping to grow the company into Euro 3.2 Billion.